

WALLINGFORD.

As was expected, the attempt on the part of Lyman Beckley to place a one story building on his property on Main street, opposite the bank building, has raised quite a breeze and Judge Hubbard and other citizens have got out a petition asking that a building line be established on that street to prevent any person placing any building so near the line of sidewalk. Work was begun on the ground yesterday morning and Judge Hubbard had an interview with Mr. Beckley and the work was ordered to be discontinued and it is probable that the building will be put back on a line with the others.

Edward Nugent attempted to get off an electric car on Hanover street in Meriden before it stopped yesterday afternoon and was thrown to the ground, breaking his leg just below the knee cap. He was brought to Wallingford on the car and taken to the home of his sister, Mrs. George Donovan. Dr. McGaughey was called and put the leg in splints, but will not set the bone until the patient is permanently located in the hospital, either in New Haven or Meriden, as he cannot be moved after the work is done.

Richard Rhenhard, who was supposed to be dying from an overdose of chloral and morphine, is all right again. It seems he also swallowed a half pint of Wallingford gin, which proved too much for the other poison and he failed to die. Either dose taken alone would have proved fatal.

Word was received here last evening from Fort Pierce, Fla., that Mrs. Frank M. Tyler has a new baby girl. All are doing well.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fenn of East Center street have a new daughter, born yesterday morning.

Richard Reinhardt will be taken to the Meriden insane retreat as soon as there is a vacancy. The superintendent telephoned Selectman Mix early last evening that he could not receive him for at least a week and would notify as soon as an opening was had.

G. M. Hallenbeck has bought of Hall & Elton Co. the tract of land between the latter's factory and the Nickel shop, between Cherry street and the railroad.

Miss Kate Eagan, formerly employed at Simpson, Hall, Miller & Co., and R. Wallace & Sons, in charge of the machine furnishing departments, died in Hartford last week of pneumonia.

George Washington Broadbent went to New Haven yesterday afternoon expressly to get a hair cut. Washington is very particular in his appearance and is always bound to be in style, never trusting such work to anybody but a city barber.

Ellhu Carlisle of Goshen was a borough visitor yesterday.

Miss Kate A. Daly is quite ill at her home on Church street.

T. H. Daly has gone into the tea and spice business.

Bert McMillan, formerly in the employ of J. A. Cook, died Wednesday night at the house of Willis Williams down Northford way. McMillan came to the house in a broken down condition from exposure on the road and was taken in and cared for until he died.

Rev. Frank Draper of New Milford will preach in St. Paul's church this evening.

The schools close this afternoon until Tuesday morning, April 2.

H. V. B. Smith, who had bargained for the Weekly Times plant, has given up the project and returned to his home in Crossville, Tenn.

George D. Munson is ill with a severe attack of the grip, somewhere west of Chicago, where he has gone on a business trip.

THE CAREER OF NAPOLEON.

The Second Lecture in Professor Wheeler's Course—Conquest of Italy and Egypt.

Professor Wheeler gave the second in his course of lectures on "Napoleon" at the New Haven Colony Historical society building Wednesday evening. He took up the narrative where he left off last week about the middle of the Italian campaign. He said that the republic of Venice was defenceless and Napoleon soon conquered it.

The summer of '97 was spent by his son in overthrowing the Roman empire, making use of the Roman church to help him.

His object was to keep his army independent of the government, and finally submit France to his own power.

Bonaparte dispatched two million dollars in gold to France, and although he was not in the highest favor at this time, he could not be dispensed with, because he could secure gold which was needed to keep up the government.

Bonaparte sent one of his lieutenants to France, who remained there awhile and became quite popular. Finally he acquired a position at the head of the government military forces. Napoleon therefore had a secret ally at the head of the home forces. Austria sent into Italy one of her most accomplished diplomats, who thought he could easily persuade Bonaparte to surrender Italy.

But this was just the kind of a man Bonaparte liked to deal with. He remained there some time trying to arrange the matter, but making little headway. One day, while at dinner, the diplomat made a remark which Bonaparte thought was his chance.

He arose, and hurled the tray down the floor, exclaiming, "So shall it be with Austria unless she surrenders at once."

The diplomat became frightened and soon after Austria surrendered.

Bonaparte's work in Italy was completed, so he was sent to make arrangements for peace with Austria. He soon tired of the stillness and quiet of the court, and after a day or so, and the necessary papers being signed, he returned to France and went into public life for a short time. He saw he had grown very popular with the people and thought how he could best use this power. At this time he was the first one to see that England was the strongest enemy of France, so he made a tour through the south and over into Italy, organizing at all the seaports armies and fitting up vessels. This was done very secretly, and when they were all prepared he sent them against the English stationed at Gibraltar under Nelson.

As soon as he had started this fleet he sent a dispatch to France saying: "Destroy England or she will destroy us." One of Bonaparte's great objects seemed to be to get possession of India. It is said he once remarked: "What is Moscow? Nothing but a station on the road to India." But this object was never to be attained. His next move, however, was the Egyptian expedition, by which France practically gained control of the Mediterranean sea. Bonaparte captured Alexandria, and from there he marched to Cairo, and it was at this place he received the news of the destruction of his fleet.

At about this time the Russians joined with the Austrians and came against France and drove the French troops back to where Bonaparte had started. So all was again lost which Bonaparte had won. Bonaparte, hearing of this and being unable to obtain vessels to return his army to France, deserted them at Cairo, and securing a small vessel, set sail in the night for France. When he arrived he went directly to Paris and was there welcomed as the chief of the state. All recognized him as their superior and leader, and the crown was offered him. Why should he not take France? He had earned it. Was it not his?

Fragonard and Boncher.

In one year Mme. de Pompadour is said to have spent 500,000 francs in perfumes. Are many such customers to be found now? Mme. Dubarry owed her perfume 2,275 livres 6 sol at her death. History does not say whether this was for a year's perfumes or whether the account had "run on."

Luckless Dubarry, who might have escaped had she believed in her danger! Grasse is the better for her death, for to this day a series of pictures along the same lines it has in the past, except for the probable omission of a Springfield game and for changes in playing rules suggested by the experience of last fall.

which she commissioned Fragonard to paint for her pavilion at Luciennes remains in the house in which that painter dwelt—"Maison Malvian," still occupied by one of his descendants.

How did Fragonard himself escape? Perhaps, as the walls and staircase of his house would seem to indicate, because he knew how to go with the times. He sometimes was heard to say that "Nature had let him be born poor," and had said, "Tire-toi de l'effaire comme tu pourras." At the critical period of the revolution, he certainly did so with great success. These walls are ornamented with revolutionary emblems, but they are so skillfully and artistically combined that the effect is excellent. Bundles of fasces, Phrygian caps, heads of Liberty and heads of so-called lovers of liberty, are there in all their grim austerity; and yet, amusingly enough, it is evident that the painter's imagination has sometimes strayed into paths more congenial to it, for the cords which bind the fasces together never can help tying themselves into true lover's knots. The pictures done for Mme. Dubarry depleted courtly lovers of the Louis XV. period, and are, of course, highly conventional and somewhat superficial, but, in spite of strained composition, singularly graceful. They show, perhaps, what Gainsborough might have been if, like Fragonard, he had been a pupil of Chardin, and of "the Anacreon of Painting," Boucher. "If you take the old masters seriously, you are a ruined man," said Boucher, when Fragonard, who had won the grand prix le peinture, was going to Rome. He did not take them seriously.—Longman's Magazine.
